First Zeppelin Flight Centenary
2000

Zeppelin the man and his airships

(LZ-1) 1900

The first flight of the first Zeppelin airship, LZ-1, took place on July 2, 1900. The ship was 416 feet long and 38.5 feet in diameter with 399,000 cubic feet of hydrogen in 17 gasbags. She had a total lift of 27,400 pounds but weighed nearly 13 tons. This meant that only about 15,000 pounds of lift was left for the crew, fuel, and water ballast. The control surfaces consisted of tiny rudders above and below the hull at the bow and on the sides of the hull at the stern. The sliding weight was suspended 80 feet beneath the hull. The LZ-1 made only 8 miles per hour on this first flight but reached 17 miles per hour on her second flight.

Celebrating 100 years since the first flight of the first Zeppelin

A LESOTHO PHILATELIC SAFARI ENDANGERED WILDLIFE OF SOUTHERN AFRICA

African Black Rhinoceros (Diceros bicornis)

Black rhinos are unpredictable and can be dangerous, charging a disturbing sound or smell. They feed on twigs and leaves.

Mountain Gorilla (Gorilla gorilla beringei)

Mountain gorilla is the largest of primates. They are wholly vegetarians, living in Western and west-central Africa. Though able to climb trees, they prefer to walk on ground on all fours.

Leopard (Panthera pardus)

Leopards often lie basking in the sun on a branch. They swim and climb well. Their sight and sense of smell are good and their hearing is very acute.

Mountain Zebra (Equus zebra zebra)

Mountain zebra is a distinct species of South Africa. They are smaller than other zebras.

Roseate Tern (Sterna dougallii dougallii)

Roseate Terns fly with rapid wing beats. They usually come ashore only to nest.

Zanzibar Red Colobus Monkey (Colobus badius kirkii)

The Zanzibar Red Colobus Monkey are agile and graceful in tree tops but clumsy on the ground. They live in East Africa.

PORTRAITURE

Painted and sculpted portraits of contemporary figures occupy a prominent place among the arts of the Momoyama era. Their subjects include emperors and warlords, prominent cultural personalities and merchants, monks and nuns, as well as lay women and children. Although there is a marked tendency towards conventionalization, the expressive range of Momoyama portraiture is broad, with many works of compelling physical and psychological insight.
